What's Hot: Historic property boasts refresh

A Rhode Island landmark has debuted its new face. Watch Hill Inn in Watch Hill, Rhode Island, an 18-room building originally built in 1845 and listed on the National Historical Landmark Register in Washington, D.C., has undergone a complete renovation to become an all-suite, luxury property. Designer Donna Simmons (working for operator Ocean House Management's Ocean House Design Group) has created an updated interpretation of effortless East Coast style. Pale walls form a spacious shell for the suites' comfortable and inviting vibe. Taupe and brown sofas help give the space a home-away-from-home feeling. Light blue pillows and tables in the living area punch up the look with a slightly unexpected twist. Each unit also includes a kitchen and private laundry services.

Chocolate and blue tones give the living area a calming vibe.

The multimillion-dollar renovation was carried out as a joint venture between Ocean House Management and Watch Hill Properties. The hotel will continue to be managed by and affiliated with Ocean House Management, as well as Relais & Châteaux.
